Reliable estimate for India for the year 1996 is not available. Therefore the figure 2.68 indicated for 1999-2000 is not strictly comparable with the figures of other countries. Moreover, the unemployment rates prevailing in different countries may not be comparable because the way employment is measured differs from one country to another. Countries also differ in respect of the size of the organised sector vis-a-vis unorganised sector and the efficacy of the respective national statistical system that estimates employment.

(b) to (d) In India significant job opportunities are being created in services sector such as Financial Services, Information Technologies and Tourism. In addition, various poverty alleviation and employment generation programmes both in urban and rural areas are in operation which now have been re-designed and restructured to improve their efficacy and impact on the poor. In the present scenario regular additional wage employment alone would not be sufficient. Hence efforts have been made to divert the unemployed to self-employment and to small-scale ventures. Recognising the problem of unemployment, a Task Force under the Chairmanship of Dr. M.S. Ahluwalia, Member, Planning Commission has been set up to go into the details of the employment generation taking place and suggest measures to create at least 100 million jobs in a period of ten years (10 million each year).
